

ABSTRACT

In a method for measuring jitter, a signal under test is inputted to generate signal transition locations. A signal transition location is latched using a sampling clock signal, and the signal transition location is converted to a delay value. The delay value is converted to an edge position output, and a value of the edge position output is detected.

5